

Make-up course could give you a new image

Do you wonder how today's film stars get their flawless on-screen looks? How does Catherine Zeta Jones get that perfect pout, what gives Keira Knightley her porcelain-smooth complexion and who makes George Clooney look that gorgeous?

Mother Nature obviously has had a major part to play, but the stars of the big screen are given a little more down-to-earth assistance. They all benefit from the skills of leading make-up artists.

Now, Motherwell College is offering everyone the chance to learn the basics of make-up – from catwalk to photographic styles. The course leads to the Vocational Training Charitable Trust certificate in fashion/photographic make-up.

This evening course runs for 36 weeks and is an excellent opportunity for anyone who wants a career in the fashion industry.

The course teaches basic techniques of how to transform people with true make-over results and how hairdressing and make-up complement each other.

Would-be make-up artists will learn how to create models' picture-perfect images from dedicated tutors, who are prepared to share all the tricks of the trade.

There are no formal entry requirements for this course, but course participants will need to purchase an equipment kit.
