Caroline Galt (pictured) not only has a driving licence to enable her to ferry passengers around Glasgow in her 'black hack', but she now holds another driving licence to prove she can operate a computer.

Caroline, 34, decided it was about time she got to grips with modern technology after driving taxis for eight years. A friend suggested she do the European Computer Driving Licence (ECDL) course at Eaglesham library.

"I would definitely recommend this course. I couldn't even switch on a computer when I started in January but now I have my own computer, regularly surf the net for enjoyment and can send emails to my friends," said Caroline, from Eaglesham.

The ECDL course has seven modules which include basic concepts of information technology, use of a computer, managing files, word processing and spreadsheets. The course is available at all East Renfrewshire libraries.

Caroline used her ILA Scotland to help fund her course.
