

Our man in the North

Organisations throughout the North are being targeted by ILA Scotland.

It is hoped unions, housing associations, local authorities, community groups and businesses in the Highlands and Islands could be potential partners for the nationwide scheme.

ILA Scotland helps people who are over 18 and living in Scotland get up to £200 towards the cost of learning new skills. The learning is done at a time, place, pace and in a way to suit individuals.

Now, in a bid to attract partners from all walks of commercial and community life, ILA Scotland has appointed a new partnership development officer.

Colin Reed (pictured) hopes to encourage groups and organisations to become partners and promote ILA Scotland to their members and staff. He will be covering northwards from Perth and Dundee, and his remit will include all of the islands.

He will be working with Claire Elliot, ILA Scotland's partnership development officer for the South of the country.

His previous post was as a project manager at Angus College where he specialised in improving employability skills.

Colin can be contacted on 07917 130196 or at colinr@learndirectscotland.com.
